Their overland Journey thither began in 1804, and was finished the following year. For the centennial show which is being peranized in their honor, and which will be formally opened next May. the preparations are well advanced. An area less extensive than that required at St. Louis is to be occupied. and the buildings will be fewer in number and less imposing in dimenlarger structures are said to be so copper, will point the western path near completion that the removal of at the Lewis and Clark exposition. Co-operation by the national and a number of state made, at her own expense, a large governments—that of Massachusetts among them-is assured, and the projectors of the undertaking are anticipating a large measure of success.

The landing of Captain Robert Gray, of Boston, at the mouth of the Columbia river, in 1792, was not without influence on history. His explorations furnished the basis for a claim to the adjacent territory by the been identified with its politics, has United States whether Washington or London should rule the ferritory, Gray's venture may have gone further than the more dangerous and difficult service of Lewis and Clark. San Francisco ranked ninth among the cities of the United States in the last census year. It then had a population of 342,000, while Portland claimed scarcely more than 90,000 and Scattle only about 89,000. In point of fer tility and scenery, the northern states of the Pacific coast closely rival their southern neighbor. Their production of fruit, wheat and timber is simply magnificent, and the salmon fisheries of the Columbia are probably without an aqual anywhere in the world. California however, has a more attracthe interest and in winter, and her growth was wonderfully stimulated by the discovery of gold there half a century ago. But for that help it is doubtful whether she would have enjoyed greater prosperity than Oregon or Washington. Even yet the resources of the latter two have been utilized imperfectly. Both have a

CANTEEN GONE FOREVER.

Canteen and anti-canteen talk is heard everywhere. The majority, in fact, 90 per cent of the army officers, are in favor of restoring the canteen, of allowing a room in every post where beer and light liquors can be sold to the soldiers. Many cases are pointed out showing that the moraliity of the men would be better, dis-cipline would be improved, and that the health of the soldiers would be much better if the canteen was again allowed at army posts and on military reservations

But what use is all this argument this mass of evidence and weight of testimony? The canteen has gone and gone forever. Instead of restorif the prohibition advocates and the temperance workers some time secur-ed the passage of a bill prohibiting
